I want to remind you that I don't have it as a goal that we read a certain amount of Scripture each day, and I don't believe it's important that you read through the Bible each year . . . even though I'm not suggesting it's a bad goal to read through the Bible in a year. The value of soaking my mind and thinking processes in God's Word is that as I meditate on His Word, I'll learn how He thinks, and acts, and I'll be given the challenge, by the Holy Spirit, to make adjustments in my thinking processes, which will impact the decisions I make and how I live out those decisions – the result of my thinking/reasoning processes. As I get closer to Jesus, through His Word and through the working of the Holy Spirit in my heart and mind, I'll find myself living closer to how God wants me to live, and I'll find myself hearing more clearly what He wants me to be doing, and should He want me to make some shift in my life, I'll be in tune to hear that from Him.

I'm starting out in the Gospel of Luke, which our Sunday teaching series is from. I love watching what Jesus does, and hearing what He says, through Dr. Luke's eyes and ears. I'll also be paying attention to how other people responded to Jesus, and the lessons they learned, or could have learned, and I'm committed to learning from their experiences as well and making good application of what I find to my life. I expect to get to know Jesus better, which will help me know how to relate to life around me in a more Christ-like manner, and I'll come to the end of Luke a little closer to Jesus than when I started today! Ask yourself, "What can I take away from this journey through Luke's report of the life and ministry of Jesus . . . how can I apply this to my personal life?"

I'll finish the month in Paul's letter to the church in Ephesus, listening to and applying his insights and instruction to my life. Ephesians is one of those little books that powerfully impacted my life many years ago, and I'm looking forward to reading and reviewing this little book again.

Here we go! Thanks for joining me! We're headed into some really good stuff!

Shalom,

D. P.
